

News release

9 February 2007

More disruptive weather is forecast

Snow is forecast across many parts of Wales, the Midlands and central southern England today causing more problems for travellers.

Met Office forecasters are particularly concerned for Wales and the West Midlands, where 5-10 cm of snow can be expected widely today, with the worst affected areas seeing a further 20-30 cm of snow.

Transport networks are key aspects of the country's infrastructure and the Met Office works with other major organisations in helping keep the UK moving. Snow can settle quickly on untreated roads and pavements, so extra care while travelling is advisable.

Through the weekend and early next week, the unsettled weather looks set to continue. There is a risk of more wintry conditions with snow and ice for some northern areas of the UK with heavy rain and the possibility of flooding for parts of the south. It is advisable to check the latest forecasts and travel conditions over coming days.

The best weather advice and warnings can be found on the Met Office web site.

Latest forecast for the UK

UK warnings of severe weather

What to do in severe weather

For further information:

Met Office Press Office +44 (0)1392 886655

E-mail: pressoffice@metoffice.gov.uk

Met Office Customer Centre 0870 900 0100

If you're outside the UK +44 (0)1392 885680